Colic and diaper rash -- gone with one CAMS treatment!

Stephanie and son, Anthony

Mary Ludlow is a licensed massage therapist with years of professional experience. "When I bought my first CAMS unit (the RJV-TensCam) I wasn't sure how I would use it in my practice," recalls Mary, "but it didn't take long to discover how helpful it was for inflammation. After a while, it was my patients who began to ask for CAMS treatments. They noticed numerous benefits." Recently, Mary had one of the most gratifying experiences of her career when she treated a young mother and her new baby.

"We were really struggling with a new baby," remembers Stephanie, the baby's mother. "From the very beginning, he seemed to have abdominal distress. Every evening he cried for hours. We tried everything -- to no avail. The situation began to wear on all of us."

Every mother who has had a sick baby can identify with Stephanie's struggle. When a problem continues, the stress and lack of sleep can take a huge toll on a whole family. For Stephanie (a working mother attending university and breast feeding a newborn) things had gotten to the breaking point. "I was more than discouraged," she recalls. Out of desperation, Stephanie took the baby to Mary for CAMS Therapy. It had helped other problems; perhaps it could help with the colic.

Mary's scan of the baby identified three areas of concern: inflammation associated with a severe diaper rash; disturbance in the abdomen and small intestines; and emotional distress presenting on the right side at the top of the head. Mary treated all three areas twice for 2 minutes. Then intuitively she treated Stephanie while she held her baby.

"I started to cry," remembers Stephanie. "I couldn't stop, so I let it come. As the tears fell, I felt a release and a sense that everything would be all right. I connected with my son in a very beautiful way during those few minutes."

"That evening," continues Stephanie, "my son had two unusual bowel movements. Within 24 hours he was a completely different baby. His diaper rash disappeared and he was cooing and interacting with us like never before. He has not had a crying bout since. To say that I am grateful would be an understatement."
