CAMS treatment for Kidney Disease

"I have been an insulin dependent diabetic for over 10 years," recalls Don Goff. "In 2006, I was entered into the kidney transplant program and I attended dialysis classes as I prepared for dialysis and possible transplant."

Diabetes often leads to kidney failure and the need for dialysis. It is a contributing factor in about 35% of all cases of chronic kidney disease. According to present day medical knowledge, chronic kidney disease is incurable.

However, in 2009 Don had an opportunity to participate in a CAMS research trial. He was loaned a CAMS Personal Tuner and instructed to treat his kidneys for two minutes twice a day. When his condition did not improve, he increased the treatment time to ten minutes twice a day. At this point, Don began to see marked improvement. "Over the next three months, my energy level improved and under my doctor's supervision, I was able to reduce my insulin requirement-by half," says Don.

Subsequent tests indicated that Don's kidney function was also improving. His creatinine levels (a good measure of kidney function) dropped from 3.4 to 2.5. With less frequent use of the Personal Tuner, creatinine levels eventually dropped to 2.1 where they are stable today (normal levels are .6 to 1.2).

"The most remarkable improvement has been in my energy and mobility," says Don. "I have gone from walking a half block three times a week to walking ten blocks four times a week."

Research has shown that when conditions have existed for a prolonged period of time, the human energetic field requires longer (and sometimes more frequent) treatment with the CAMS devices (see pages 5-8 of Beyond Pills Knives and Needles). In Don's case, two minutes was not enough to restore coherence to the energetic field. His ability to use a Personal Tuner in his own home made all the difference.

For patients with diabetically-induced kidney disease, it is suggested that the pancreas and the kidneys be treated. For other forms of kidney disease, treat the kidneys and any offending interference field(s).

New Book about CAMS Technology

Beyond Pills, Knives and Needles by Dr. Charles Crosby includes: A complete description of the science that supports CAMS technology; The nature of interference fields and how to locate them; How to use any of the CAMS devices to treat a wide variety of symptoms.

Ask Dr. Crosby

Have other patients with kidney disease seen similar improvement using CAMS technology?

Yes. Several kidney patients have experienced marked improvement with regular self treatment. It helps for them to have access to a Personal Tuner. Read more about the Personal Tuner
