CAMS reduces arthritic inflammation & improves joint mobility

Phyllis Mann will be 85 years old in September. For a woman her age she's still quite active and loves getting out in the garden. "It's that time of year," says Phyllis, "and this Spring I'm really grateful for the CAMS technology. It has given me back the use of my hands."

Phyllis has had osteoarthritis for a number of years - and carpal tunnel syndrome. "It hasn't kept me from doing all the things I really want to do but this last winter was cold and damp and the pain and swelling was worse than usual."

"I have a CAMS unit that I use for lots of aches and pains. I don't know why I never thought to use it for the arthritis in my hands," remarks Phyllis. "But once I started using it, it has made a tremendous difference."

Within 24 hours after treating her hands for the first time, Phyllis' right hand was no longer swollen. Her left hand (the worst) was significantly better (see photos). Since that time, Phyllis has been using the CAMS more regularly. She has found that her grip has returned and she doesn't have to keep changing hands when she holds something. "I'm more comfortable using my hands and they respond with less pain," says Phyllis.

Phyllis had spent several hours in the garden before we spoke with her. "I wouldn't be out in the garden if I didn't have the CAMS. It has made all the difference for me this year."

Because one of the underlying issues with osteoarthritis is inflammation, and because inflammation is rapidly addressed by treatment with CAMS Therapy, arthritis is often relieved by treating the painful area. Swelling can be significantly reduced following a 2-4 minute CAMS treatment with return of mobility. Often, longer-term relief can be gained when an offending interference field is found and treated. Treatment of the primary interference field will frequently resolve arthritic pain in many different areas of the body.
