Dyspepsia Gone!

Dr. Don Warren

Don Warren has been a practicing naturopath and homeopathic physician for nearly 30 years. He recently purchased a TensCam. "I'm discovering a variety of ways to use the TensCam in my practice," says Dr. Warren.

Just before Christmas, Dr. Warren had a call from an older patient who was in considerable distress with severe dyspepsia. The gentleman had gone to another city to help his son paint his home and while away he began to experience mild bloating and gas. When he returned home, the problem escalated to the point where he was in continual discomfort and could not sleep at night. Nothing he had tried helped.

"I suggested he take digestive enzymes and I recommended a formula with HCl and ox bile," recalls Dr. Warren. "I told him to make an appointment if his symptoms continued." One week later, the distressed gentleman was in Dr. Warren's office.

"Looking at the problem from a homeopathic perspective, I prescribed a homeopathic remedy. Then, almost as an aside, the patient told me he had been experiencing a deep, needle-like pain in his back." The pain appeared at about the same time as the dyspepsia, and the area correlated with the T-12, L-1 vertebrae. Dr. Warren astutely recognized the relationship between these vertebrae and gastrointestinal disturbances. He treated the painful area of the back for 2 minutes with the TensCam. "I specifically told the patient NOT to use the homeopathic remedy I had given him for 24 hours," recalls Dr. Warren. "If his symptoms subsided, I wanted to know whether it was the TensCam or the remedy."

The morning of the second day after treatment, Dr. Warren received another call. "Dyspepsia gone! Everything back to normal," came the report. And that's the last he has heard from this patient. Dr. Warren is excited to have another modality available to him--a completely safe, simple, non-invasive treatment that often produces remarkable results.

Ask Dr. Crosby

Is CAMS a viable alternative to the "purple pill" (Nexium) for treatment of acid reflux and heartburn?

Since CAMS is a non-invasive treatment with no side effects, it is always something to consider before Nexium which has a number of potential side effects.
