TensCam relieves Australian cellist's wrist pain

Painful tendons in her right wrist had made playing the cello nearly impossible for Sarah Cuming, a musician in Australia's Orchestra Victoria. Then her osteopath introduced her to TensCam.

Sarah has been a professional cellist for 35 years. "Our orchestra plays for the ballet and the opera at the Victorian Arts Center, and we do concerts and tours," she says. "It's a full-time job."

Wrist pain threatens Sarah's career

A year and a half ago, Sarah started experiencing severe wrist pain. "I developed a problem in the tendons on the thumb side of my right wrist," she explains. "The tendons were rubbing against the sheath, which actually shredded the tendons. They became swollen and inflamed."

Conventional treatment didn't help much

Sarah wasn't in a position to rest her wrist. "I just kept working," she recalls. "I tried to reduce my workload, but when you're in the middle of an opera season, you can't pull out. I just kept limping along and started treatment.

"I had therapy; I went to see a surgeon and I had two cortisone injections," Sarah explains. "The hand therapy didn't help very much. Certainly putting the wrist in a brace didn't help."

TensCam relieves her pain and swelling

Then Sarah began treatments with cranial osteopath Dion Kulak, DO. "Dr. Kulak had purchased a TensCam and she taught me how to use it," she recalls.

Sarah was so impressed with the TensCam that she bought one. "The TensCam has had a remarkable effect," she says. "It reduces the swelling when I'm doing a lot of playing. I use the TensCam in the morning, or at night before bed if I've had a hard day's work and the wrist is a bit swollen. Or both.

"I think the TensCam is really helping," says Sarah. "I'm quite impressed with it. I'm feeling very positive that I'll be able to have a complete recovery."
