Veterinarian says CAMS is "front and center" in his practice

Twenty years ago Eddy Beltran, DVM never thought he'd embrace energy medicine. "My veterinary training and my continuing education never taught any form of what is now known as energy medicine," recalls Dr. Beltran. "But as I became interested in pain management and in true healing, I was introduced to Neural Therapy and to Autonomic Response Testing (ART)" [a form of muscle testing]. These modalities focus and rely on the identification of interference fields. They were Dr. Beltran's introduction to energetic medicine.

"Treating an interference field can have an immediate effect on pain but it often has far reaching, long-term physiological benefits for the whole body," remarks, Dr. Beltran. For years he used ART and Neural Therapy in conjunction with his veterinary practice.

"I met Dr. Crosby at a Neural Therapy workshop. He was demonstrating the use of a handheld crystal for the treatment of interference fields. At that time, I thought it was crazy," says Dr. Beltran. But a seed had been planted. Dr. Beltran pondered the idea for several years. He remembers finally asking himself, "What's so strange about the possibility of changing dynamics in the energetic field by projecting an energy field into the tissue?" Coincidentally, he met Dr.

Crosby again at another workshop. This time the TensCam technology was being introduced.

"I was more open at this point, says Dr. Beltran, "and the presence of an actual device made the concept more credible." Dr. Beltran had been experiencing hip and shoulder pain after an accident and he had not been able to find relief. He asked for a personal demonstration of the TensCam. "I was completely amazed, recalls Dr. Beltran, My hip and shoulder pain virtually disappeared overnight. I bought a unit before the end of the workshop."

Today, Dr. Beltran describes the use of the CAMS technology as "front and center" in his practice. "I still use Neural Therapy but not nearly as much. I rarely go through the day without using a CAMS device and I can't imagine my practice without it. Since my introduction to energy medicine, and especially since my introduction to the CAMS technology, work has become more intuitive. Using the CAMS technology has gone hand in hand with a growing ability to tune in to the special needs of each patient."

Dr. Beltran's remark about how his intuitive ability has improved in conjunction with his use of the CAMS technology is not unique! We have had numerous similar reports. Some practitioners have developed extraordinary insights into the nature of interference fields and disease processes -- others have developed their own techniques and protocols. We applaud these individuals for their creativity and tenacity. If you have unique ideas or experiences you are willing to share, please contact us.
