CAMS Technology: Literally a Lifesaver

Dr. Luis Joy has been a family physician for 31 years. He has a broad background and numerous certifications. His patients respect him for his medical skills, his years of experience, and for his keen intuition. He is the kind of doctor anyone would want on their team. Dr. Joy has been using a PulseCam in his practice for nearly 4 years.

"I've seen many wonderful results with this equipment," says Dr. Joy. "I recently purchased a LaserCam."

Earlier this year, a 68-year-old man was brought to Dr. Joy's office. The man had two surgical wounds that would not heal following the removal of a benign tumor on his left lung. It had been over 3 months since the man's last surgery. The infection was so bad that he had been given little hope of recovery. When he coughed (almost constantly), air escaped from his affected lung through the puss-laden wounds with sickening noise. The man had lost a lot of weight, he was extremely depressed, and he was not interested in interacting at all. He had obviously given up.

"When I examined him, it became clear to me that he was dying," says Dr. Joy. "I wondered why his family had brought him to me. At first I had no ideas for how to help him."

But then Dr. Joy noticed two missing molars--both on the left side--the side of the problematic lung. He recalled the connection between the molars and the lung/large intestine meridian and when he tested for energetic blockage, he got a positive response.

"I treated the interference field in the left jaw with the PulseCam for 2 minutes. I also treated the chest and several chakras that were weak. I gave him a nutritional injection and sent him home."

One week later, no one could believe the difference. One wound had completely closed up. The other, larger wound had improved dramatically. The infection had cleared and new tissue was beginning to grow. Four weeks later, this patient had gained weight; he was joking with everyone in the office; and he was walking on his own. He coughed very little.

"Sometimes it amazes me what the CAMS technology will do. I can't imagine my practice without it." reports Dr. Joy.

Dr. Joy's practice: Instituto Joy Pro Salud (Joy Institute for Health) is located in Corozal, Puerto Rico. He can be reached via email at: prosalud@prtc.net

Ask Dr. Crosby

Does CAMS technology address the emotional component associated with many illnesses?

Yes. Emotional traumas leave disturbances in the energetic field just like physical traumas. CAMS treatment to these areas clears the disturbance, often resolving both emotional and physical symptoms. I have included a whole section on the resolution of emotional problems in the new book, Beyond Pills, Knives & Needles.
