CAMS for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD)

Linda Whitehead has been a nurse for many years. In the 1970s and 80s, she began to observe that the medical profession didn't have all the answers. As time passed, she was more open to alternatives but still had a healthy skepticism when it came to energetic modalities. Then in October of 2014, she and her husband were involved in a serious car accident that rolled the car and left both with closed head injuries. Besides a concussion, Linda was left with PTSD (Post Traumatic Stress Disorder).

"The accident changed everything for me," says Linda. "It might have been worse because I lost a daughter in an accident years ago. Who knows ... but I was not the same after the accident. I was tense all the time; I couldn't be around a group of people very long -- even those who were familiar; I didn't want to leave the house; and driving on a freeway was not an option."

Linda's husband Arthur, had a friend who was familiar with CAMS technology. He made arrangements for Linda to get an RJV TensCam. "I might have been a lot more skeptical," recalls Linda, "if I had thought I was getting better. But after four months of anxiety and tension, I was ready for anything that might help."

Linda treated the area on the back, right side of her head -- the spot connected with emotional trauma. She also treated the front part of her head, adrenal glands and thyroid. "I figured with all the stress, those areas could certainly use the help," says Linda.

Ten days later, it was Arthur who noticed Linda was calmer than she had been in months. Things got better from there. Recently, she and Arthur took a short road trip and Linda did just fine.

"I was able to lean back and actually enjoy the ride," comments Linda. "I've also noticed that I can listen to music again. Even before the accident, I didn't have much tolerance for music playing in the background. Now it doesn't bother me. A lot of things have changed. My memory has improved, I am more rested in the morning and I have more energy. I actually think I'm better than I was before the accident!"
